05 Komakiyama Castle (Komaki City)

This was the first castle built by Nobunaga in 1563. Excavations have proven this castle to be the first to feature extensive piled stone walls, and the evolution from an earthen wall to stone wall castle construction. Komakiyama Castle was also used as a headquarters for Tokugawa Ieyasu during the Battle of Komaki-Nagakute. The Reskishiru Komaki facility was opened in the spring of 2019 and introduces the history of Mt. Komaki in a beginner friendly, easy-to-understand manner. The Komakiyama Cherry Blossom Festival is held every spring, and features about 10 species of 1,150 cherry trees in full bloom.

*The Historical Museum's 4th floor observatory will be closed for renovations until Thursday, March 19, 2020 (tentative).

Castles That Were Theatres of War, Mountaintop Castles, Castles of the Warlords. Aichi Prefecture is an Open Air Castle Museum!

There has been an upward trend in castle tours over the past few years, with visitors making their way to both the very simple early, and the later, more developed medieval castles.

There are said to be around 800 castles of various sizes and design constructed by the Three Unifiers, the warlords Oda Nobunaga, Toyotomi Hideyoshi, Tokugawa Ieyasu and their many associated warriors across Aichi Prefecture.

This makes Aichi Prefecture a literal outdoor museum of castles!

Castles That Served as The Stages for Battle

The Battle of Okehazama (1560), between Oda Nobunaga and the invading Imagawa Yoshimoto, was a dispute over the Imagawa taking the strategically important Odaka, and Narumi Castles. Nobunaga built the smaller Marune and Washizu Castles to cut off Odaka's supply route. These ruins are close to the Okehazama Battlefield Park. The ruins of Kutsukake Castle, where the Imagawa stayed prior to the battle can also be visited.

Toyotomi Hideyoshi and Tokugawa Ieyasu clashed at the Battle of Komaki Nagakute in 1584. Ieyasu used the Oda's former Komaki Castle site, while Hideyoshi constructed numerous castles. Excavations have revealed Komaki's innovative stone walls and grid-like town to have been the prototype for later castles.

The 1575 Battle of Nagashino Shitaragahara was fought over Nagashino Castle. Takeda Katsuyori had attacked Nagashino, only to be countered by Oda Nobunaga and Tokugawa Ieyasu. See the ruins of Nagashino's moats, earthen walls, and the informative Nagashino Castle History Museum.

Mountain Castles of the Mikawa Region

The Mikawa area is dotted with many mountain castles, made by the Matsudaira clan, ancestors of the Tokugawa to expand their territories and protect their lands from the rival Takeda clan. No structures remain, but the huge natural boulders of Ogyu Castle, and the Takeda-built Furumiya Castle ruins remain in a well-preserved state. Asuke Castle has been fully restored allowing visitors to experience a real medieval mountaintop castle.

Castles of the Rulers

Following the Battle of Sekigahara (1600), Tokugawa Ieyasu constructed the impressive Nagoya Castle. Nagoya was built to protect Eastern Japan and Edo (Tokyo) from possible attack by the rival Toyotomi clan, and to launch the attacks on Osaka to end the Toyotomi. It also accommodated the Shogun on his visits to the Emperor in Kyoto. The Honmaru Palace, reserved solely for the use of the Shogun, was destroyed in wartime fire-bombing, but was authentically reconstructed, returning it to its former glory in June 2018.
